The "Steppenwolf" in question is neither a rock group nor a Karloff classic. It is a burnt clay sculpture, brown and earth-colored, approximately twenty-four inches in diameter, whose likeness Lawrence Anthony has sketched on this "Wanted" poster. It is a creation of Bob Hasselle, a Southwestern graduate who teaches at the Cincinnati Art Institute.

Last winter, this sculpture was donated by Dr. Jameson Jones to Southwestern and hung on the wall in Clough Hall where it guarded the art treasures on the second floor. On the tenth of August, the "Steppenwolf" disappeared.

Mr. Richard Henley, Southwestern's Security Officer, assumes the "Steppenwolf" was stolen by someone who was intrigued by it, a youngster maybe, rather than by an art expert, for the sculpture, he reasons, was by no means the most valuable work of art on the second floor. Professor Anthony, in fact, estimates its value at no more than $200.

Why then the high reward? First, perhaps, because it is often difficult to determine the true price of a work of art, which lies in the eyes of the beholder, and second, the sculpture represents a fascinating manifestation of a fascinating subject: Hermann Hesse's "Steppenwolf".

Hermann Hesse, Nobel Prize winning German writer and poet (1877-1962) who enjoyed great popularity among Europe's young during the first half of the twentieth century was virtually unknown in this country until the early sixties; and then it was his works dealing with the Hindu world for which he became known, rather than his 1927 novel "Der Steppenwolf". Yet recently, the concept "Steppenwolf" has found its niche in the American scene along with such German imports as "Volkswagen", "Angst", or "Kissinger".

The dictionary defines "Steppenwolf" as "prairie wolf". In Hesse's novel, however, the term applies to Harry Haller, the novel's central character, an artistic and scholarly intellectual who discovers at the age of forty that in his pursuits of the mind he has neglected the senses, or the "wolfish" aspects of his personality. His attempts to correct this causes a schizophrenic split and also alienates him from the established values at no more than $2.

Adults Only

Beginning in mid-September, Southwestern at Memphis is offering a number of adult education night courses which will be open to the general public for quite reasonable fees.

The offerings will include several unusual courses, such as: "The Cinemaddicts", a history of motion pictures presenting at least 20 films rarely shown in recent times; "The Cinemaddicts" will continue in the spring with Garbo, Buster Keaton, and some of the early sound musicals.

Other course titles are: "The Abolition of Man?", a seminar which will explore the possibilities of where mankind is going; "Modern Religious Prophets", aimed at understanding some of the changes in modern religious thought; "American Literature Between Two Wars"; "What Do Women Want? Dear God! What Do They Want?", a study of woman's changing role in society; "The Creative Writer", a course for those who wish to learn from a professional; a study group entitled "Masterpiece Theatre", which will meet to discuss the Channel 10 programs of the same name; and "Paulkner Country: The Passing of the Old", a study of Faulkner's works.

A tour of Europe featuring Renaissance art and literature is planned for June of '72. Enrollment is requested immediately, for the number of participants will be limited.

Council Candidates

The elections on October 7 will provide voters in the neighborhood with an opportunity to select councilmen who can best represent them in the city’s legislative body.

In District 5 (Precincts 36-1, 36-2, 36-3, 40-2, and 52-1), incumbent Councilman Robert B. James is running for reelection and is being opposed by Jerry B. Tucker, who has his campaign off to a fast start by supporting who can best represent them in the city’s legislative body. District 7 (Precincts 40-1, 42-1) finds incumbent J.O. Patterson, Jr., opposed by Alma Morris. Six other council positions which neighborhood residents will elect come from the at-large candidates which are listed below:

I.O.U.'s

Miss Emma Nell Palmer of 1731 Faxon Ave., the first to have her time and talent to the Evergreen News, has had to take leave due to other obligations. Emma deserves a word of appreciation for her work.

Another setback for the neighborhood newspaper is the retirement of Mr. Warren J. Lowry of 913 Dickinson. With the relocation of his employer, and a change of management, Warren is no longer in a position to handle the reduction and photography process necessary for printing. We will continue to seek Warren’s advice on technical problems, but in the meantime we want him to know that we miss him where it hurts most: the pocketbook.

Gossip

When summer came to the Vollenite/Evergreen community, our neighbors, like neighbors everywhere, began to eye various vacation spots across the country and around the world. No corner of the earth, it would seem, was too remote and no road was too rough for the travelers of our community.

For many, well-known vacation spots around the Mid-South and Deep South were the destinations. Tom Hines of 1864 Tutwiler, for example, visited Heber Springs, Ark. He was joined by Dr. and Mrs. James Robertson who relaxed at Pickwick Lake and Mrs. Anthony Aspero of 1790 Faxon who spent a week spaing at Hot Springs. Others more solartropic ventured south to Gulf Coast beaches. David and Gene Chambers rested at Jacksonville, Fla., and Rick and Laila Eckles visited Ponte Vedra Beach, while Rosemary Hulshof of 856 N. Belvedere spent two weeks bird-watching in the Everglades. The Alabama coast was not neglected either, with Dr. and Mrs. Fred Neal and kids camping at Dolphin Island. Many others also chose islands for their vacations. Among them were Mary McLaren who spent a week at Pawley’s Island, South Carolina, and the Lawrence Anthonys who, as usual, stayed much of the summer on their island off the Carolina coast.

Other residents needed to get further away -- some to the North, like Dr. Lewis Amis and family, who visited Philadelphia; some to the Midwest, like Marilyn Nichols who visited friends in Chicago; and some to the West, such as Ed and Pat Webb who took the kids to Six Flags Over Texas (and ran into the Berwyn Rizers who live a block down the street). The forty-eight contiguous states, however, were not good enough for Nancy Pond of the University Cabanas. Her vacation was spent in Alaska with her parents.

Keeping with the cosmopolitan air of the neighborhood, many residents went international. Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood Ensminger, for example, spent two weeks with their son in British Columbia, Canada, and Mrs. and Mr. Talbot Mathis of the University Cabanas visited Mexico City and Puerto Vallarta, Europe, as usual, was popular; the Charles Sullivans of University Circle went sight-seeing in Spain and Kathryn Taylor toured the continent on a University of Tennessee trip. Europe, however, was not the only foreign soil tramped by Vollenite/Evergreen residents. The Kim Johnsons spent June in Japan, Hong Kong and Bangkok.
The Courage To Be
by John Bruhwiler

Perhaps the most significant of the summer programs for the young in our community was the High School Scholars program at Southwestern. The seven week program, open to rising seniors "of high academic ability and motivation" in the Memphis school system, was designed to help students "to be better prepared to make a successful transition from high school to college" while at the same time developing "healthy, meaningful relationships with others of different ages, different racial and social backgrounds."

The Scholars program is not a new venture. It was initiated in 1966 by Mrs. Frances Coe. Its format was shaped by Dean Jameson Jones and Dr. Carl Walters of Southwestern in consultation with outstanding high school seniors. Dr. Walters also selected the faculty and has served as director of the program since its initiation in the summer of 1967.

Student Oriented

The students who were consulted wanted above all a program which would help them ease the normally difficult transition from high school to college. They expressed the wish to "learn how to learn," to discover "how ideas are related," to become familiar with the "interrelation of data and subjects," to develop "their own selfhoods" and the "understanding of other people, especially people of another race." The teaching staff accepted these suggestions as a basis for the program, adding only language skills and analytic skills, the prerequisites for clear communication.

Love of Learning

More significant was the decision of how the program was to be administered, what teaching and learning methods were to be used. It was decided an idealistic approach was to be tried, that an endeavor was to be made to remove external motivation such as reward-punishment, acceptance-rejection and authority, and to replace it by self-motivation, the desire to learn for the love of learning. This meant doing away with grades, credits, and tests. The only gauge left to measure a student's progress, aside from the close daily contact with his teachers, was a required weekly paper on the "Theme of the Week."

The theme of the week is a sub-theme of the overall theme of the program, "The Courage to Be a Whole Person Through Understanding and Judgment". This overall theme is misleading in that it does not give appropriate credit to the academic disciplines of the program; these were seminars in rhetoric, math-science, English literature, philosophy, and political science-social sciences, all taught on an interdisciplinary level, and in relation to the overall theme and the weekly sub-theme.

Rounded Fare

For instance, during the week with the sub-theme "The Meaning of Being One's True Self", in Rhetoric Miss Lucille Fultz (Central High) asked for an essay on the student's concept of values such as integrity, honesty, responsibility, in Math-Science Professor Carl Johnson (Southwestern) talked on the physical nature of living organisms; in English Literature Miss Margaret R. Gladney (graduate student) discussed a Faulkner story about a young man who cooled his anger by burning down barns; in Philosophy Mr. James Dobbins (graduate student) examined Socrates' dictum "Know thyself" and his concept of courage; in Political Science-Social Sciences Mr. Ezekiel Owens (Porter Junior High) analyzed the figure of Dr. Martin Luther King.

These seminars constituted the meat of the program. Of lighter fare but of no less importance were the daily guest speakers and panels from the world of business, politics, and the professions from whom the students learned first hand the sometime difficulty of being a whole person. Staff and guests were supplemented by COURAGE continued thirty-two college students who served as tutors and often became friends. Relief from the academic rigor was provided by field trips, movies, crafts, sports and games.

Unqualified Success

Dr. Walters concedes that not every single seminar fit the sub-theme to perfection and that initially not every single student functioned at his full potential in the absence of the motivations he had been conditioned to. He said it took inspiration on the teachers' part who never tired of stressing the value choice every human being was constantly faced with. The teachers did this with so much success, Dr. Walters says, they had to watch for a feeling of guilt developing in some of the students.

The students considered the program a success. There was little dissatisfaction both academically and socially, and praise of the program ranged from a cool "I liked the lunches" to an ecstatic "It was love, confusion, bewilderment, fun!". Perhaps student reaction was exemplified best by Richard Lowry of 913 Dickinson, a student at Northside High who says he learned what college is about, and that teachers are people, too. As just as important is his observation that students from white or black schools who had had little social contact with students of another race learned to respect one another, even formed friendships.

The significance of the Southwestern Scholars program is perhaps best illustrated by the interest the Board of Education has taken in it. While in 1967 funds for the program came from Southwestern and the Opportunity Foundation (anonymous donor), over 90% of the program this year was funded by the Memphis Board of Education (federal E.S.A.P. money) and less than 10% by Southwestern. This year, the Board of Education also sponsored two additional Scholars programs, one at LeMoyne-Owen College and another at Memphis State University.

No News

Little can be said at this early date about the changes in our neighborhood schools. According to preliminary reports, registration went smoothly and classes started without any significant changes. As soon as the Board of Education makes the enrollment figures available, the News will publish the changes in our schools in regard to the number of students and the racial composition.

Candidates For School Board

Each neighborhood resident will have an opportunity to vote for three of the nine members of the city Board of Education to be elected October 7. Two of the Board positions are elected from the city at large and seven are elected from the city's political districts which are the same for both Council and Board of Education candidates. This constitution of the Board is new and is a result of a recent legislative act.

Candidates for District 5 are Norman D. Bryant, Mrs. Lawrence Coe, and Mrs. James T. Robertson. Candidates for District 7 are George H. Brown, Jr., and G.B. Myers. Contending for at-large Position 1 are seven persons, Ruby Gaither, Arnold Hurst, William S. Pollard, Joe Scott, Barbara E. Sonnenburg, Rev. Melvin Wade, and Mrs. Milton (Marilyn) Wray. Candidates for at-large Position 2 are Hunter Lane, Jr., and David L. Wieties.

Wind, Watermelon & Song

Despite a minor typhoon, the VECAA picnic on August 3 could be described as "successful." About seventy neighborhood residents joined several E.S.A.P. workers on the grounds of Southwestern for picnic suppers and cold drinks. Although driven into the student center by rain, the party continued with plenty of watermelon and more cold drinks.

E.S.A.P. workers awarded prizes to lucky picnickers with the kids receiving school supplies and the adults potted plants and leftover watermelons. Entertainment was provided by singers Leo LeBlanc and Lee Denson. They were supplemented by command performances by Father Tim Tighe and Nell Aspero II.

As the weather improved partyers moved back outdoors to participate in croquette, paddleball and miscellaneous activities. When the group broke up well after dark, everyone agreed that it had been a quite pleasant evening.

Praise From A Pro

Mr. Tom BeVier's feature story on our neighborhood in the Commercial Appeal (17 August, 1971) was beautiful and for many residents, we feel sure, heart-lifting. Although Mr. BeVier does not mention some shortcomings such as extreme racial imbalance at three of our four public neighborhood schools for instance, or the rash of burglaries recently in the vicinity of the Baron Hirsch Synagogue, or how one popular church summer program did not accept black children, his article nevertheless reflects the spirit of our neighborhood. We owe Mr. BeVier a debt of gratitude for a penetrating assessment of our community.
