New Shepherd
For Good Shepherd
by Rick Thomas

In 1865, The Rev. Mr. J.J. Vaulx established the Church of the Good Shepherd as an Episcopal mission for the English immigrants of Chelsea (now North Memphis). The mission was founded to serve a destitute community and from the start was a practitioner of the "social gospel." Although such activities were unpopular with most of the citizens of Memphis, then a town of 45,000, the congregation established the Refuge of the Good Shepherd for the homeless, the Canfield Colored Orphan Asylum and two satellite Episcopalian missions outside the city.

In 1972, The Rev. Mr. David W. Plumer was called as priest to the church and if he has his way many of the characteristics of the 1865 mission will be reemphasized. Rev. Plumer is steeped in the traditions of the English Anglican Church and is involved in what he describes as an Anglo-Catholic movement within the Episcopal Church. This movement seeks to restore ritual and tradition to the place it holds in the English church. This emphasis on ritual would tend, Rev. Plumer suggests, to make the "highest" Episcopal church in Tennessee even higher.

At the same time, Rev. Plumer hopes to interweave a missionary spirit into this traditional framework. His years in missionary work plus the ecumenical efforts in which he has been active with previous congregations makes him favor an evangelical approach unusual for a high church.

Rev. Plumer is to fill the position left vacant by The Rev. Homer C. Carrier who was called by St. Agnes Episcopal Church in Franklin, North Carolina. Rev. Carrier served Good Shepherd for sixteen years, and the newest wing of the church is named Carrier Hall in his honor. The church, since moving to 1971 Jackson in 1941, had grown to a congregation of 500 communicants.

Rev. Plumer, who was born in China, comes to Memphis from Trinity Church in Elkton, Maryland. His wife's family lives in Mississippi, so the couple eagerly accepted this invitation to move South. Rev. Plumer graduated from high school at the Tokyo-American School in Japan where his father was with the occupation government. After the University of Michigan, divinity school and the armed forces, Rev. Plumer became active in Episcopalian missionary work. Prior to his seven years at Trinity Church, he was stationed in Panama and Ecuador for six years. He was the first resident Episcopal priest in the city of Quito, Ecuador.

Coming to Memphis with Rev. Plumer are his wife, Con­way, and their four children—Caroline (15), Clarissa (13), Marshall (11) and Charles (8). In his spare time the revered toys with photography and canes chairs. His wife, a nurse by profession, enjoys sewing and painting. At present the Plumer family is renting a house in Raleigh.

Prior to Rev. Plumer's arrival the most pressing issue among communicants was the future of the church in the VECAA community. Fears prompted by a changing neighborhood had again rise to suggestions for moving the church and a great number of rumors concerning the Good Shepherd's plans. Rev. Plumer considers this a secondary issue. As he sees it, his main task will be to "build up the liturgical tradition and bring the church together as a family. At the same time he expects to increase member participation both within the church and within the community. He sees a return to tradition and ritual among the country's young people and feels that today many people can be attracted to a high church. He has already begun advertising services in both local newspapers and, once settled, plans to become active in community affairs.

In regard to the future of the Church of the Good Shepherd in the neighborhood, little can be said with certainty. The vestry, the governing body of the congregation, is presently assessing its situation but has not offered the property for sale to anyone. For the church to move would be a complicated procedure as much of the say in such matters is outside the hands of the local congregation. Hopefully, under Rev. Plumer's guidance what has become a neighborhood institution will continue to serve VECAA's Episcopal residents and the community for many years to come.

Report Card

The increased attention being paid to schools these days makes us aware of the fortunate position this neighborhood is in with regard to elementary schools and how important it is to give them our solid support. Many important things are happening in our schools and here is a report:

Pairing

At the October 10 meeting of the Snowden PTA a panel of experienced teachers and administrators answered questions from those present, which included many Vol­lentine parents. Some of those questions related to pairing of the two schools. Dr. Joseph Westbrook, Central Area Superintendent, explained that entire classes, students, teachers, and materials, will be moved together. In cases where this results in a teacher surplus, some classes may have to be combined to maintain the limit of one teacher per 30 children (32 children in 4th, 5th, and 6th grades). Dr. Westbrook said that the court may expect some additional mixing of classes. Transportation may be provided for those students living...
The October 10 PTA meeting featured a distinguished panel with representatives from Snowden, Vollentine, and the Board answering questions from the audience. Mr. Thompson of the safety division explained that with the two policewomen now at McLean and Parkway, all the children had been told to cross McLean there and not elsewhere. He said that traffic on Tutwiler at McLean was so light that children could cross Tutwiler there without a policewoman.

Mr. Perry described the special education services at Vollentine and Snowden and Mr. Sheffield explained that the Snowden Booster Club would get men working with the sports activities, providing transportation and adult supervision.

Mr. Thomas explained that, as of now, the band is open to more students. Students have to buy their own mouthpieces for the instruments, and may rent small instruments for about $18 per semester.

New Owner For Johns by Bernice Williams

On a recent, breakfast-less Saturday morning, this reporter pulled up in front of Johns Bakery, 1688 Jackson, along with about five other cars-full and went into the marvelous aroma that is the bakery. Mr. Carl Koppeis (pronounced cop-ice) greeted me warmly and was very gracious about being interviewed on such a busy morning.

Mr. Koppeis, a first-generation American, had been with American Bakeries for 31 years before acquiring Johns Bakery. His father, having come to America from Germany, was a baker by trade, and it was from his father that Mr. Koppeis learned much of what he knows about baking. He has lived in Memphis since 1946, first in the Frayser area and now (since 1964) in the Raleigh-Bartlett area. He is married and has two children, both married; his son lives in New Orleans, his daughter in Memphis.

Mr. Koppeis was most emphatic in pointing out that there will be no changes in the quality of Johns products and that he will do everything he can to maintain the bakery's strong reputation. Mr. Johns is still there and continuing to work. A few items have been added to the broad array of marvelous-looking goodies and staples: three new varieties of cookies, a few new kinds of coffee-cake. Mr. Koppeis is also working on developing an Italian bread; if the taste I had of it is any prediction, it will be simply fabulous. Most of all, however, Mr. Koppeis is determined to continue Johns Bakery as the very best bakery. Vollentine/Evergreen Community welcomes him and wishes him all the best.

Joining the staff at Southwestern this year is RON A. YARBROUGH, who with his wife JEANNE now occupies the house at 492 No. Avalon. The Yarbroughs moved from Jackson, Mississippi, in April. Ron serves as Director of Annual Giving at the College, while Jeanne is a social worker at DeNeauville Heights School for Girls. In their spare time the Yarbroughs collect antiques and travel.

In our community there are several persons who are being taken for granted. Among others, these are the sanitation workers, the firemen, the policemen, and the postmen. These people render invaluable services. Here is a short sketch of one of these public servants.

Mr. Hillary Reddrick is a carrier technical utility man, more commonly known as postman. Mr. Reddrick is my postman on Wednesday. Every other day he is someone else’s postman. Mr. Reddrick has five areas to deliver, one for each day of the work week. He is the relief man for the Hollywood district, area 38108.

Mr. Reddrick’s working day begins when he arrives each morning at the area station at Hollywood. He first sorts out the mail. This takes most of the morning. After he has assembled all the mail for his area, which is different each day, he loads it on his truck and then heads for one of his routes. He makes between five hundred and six hundred stops every day. This takes from four to five hours. The time depends not on the amount of mail, but on the number of stops he makes.

Beside the traditional hazards of being a carrier, i.e. rain, sleet, snow, gloom of night, and teeth of dog, there are those that go unnoticed, except for the carrier. Such things as clothespins on mailboxes (for holding letters to be picked up), fenced-in yards, and the absence of mailboxes.

Mr. Reddrick’s home life seems far more relaxed. He lives with his wife and daughter at 1498 South Barksdale. He grew up in Ripley, Tennessee, and moved to Memphis in his teens. He has been working with the mail service for one more year than his seventeen-year marriage. His wife Clora works at the Board of Education, and his daughter Karen attends Catholic High school, where she is a freshman. Mr. Reddrick tinkers at electronics in his spare time.

It is important to know those that serve us every day. Though no great effort needs to be made to exhibit one’s appreciation, a cup of hot coffee on a cold day will go a long way.

Midtown Action

The Central Garden Area Association (CGAA) has taken a step toward controlling the future of its community by drawing up a contract with Pollard and Associates for a long-range plan. Since the Central Garden district, like the VECAA community, is an established neighborhood with little major development expected, the plan will place much emphasis on current and future zoning. Most of the $10,000 fee for the plan has now been raised.

CGAA has also elected new officers for the coming year with Tom Nathan, an architect, of 1574 Vinton being selected as president.
