1877 Crump Avenue
In the 16 years Margaret and Bob Leggett have lived in their 1922 Craftsman bungalow, they have basically rebuilt it. Their first building venture was converting a porch into an L-shaped addition housing a laundry room. In 1996, after ten years of dreaming and 20,000 drawings, their 1000 square foot addition was born.

An arch echoing the one from the living room to dining room leads the eye and the visitor into the large, light-filled den that looks out onto the backyard patio. A brick wall painted white is a reminder of where the house once stopped. Stairs lead to a large upstairs bedroom with enough room to house Bob’s childhood train set and a great view of the backyard filled with native plants. A bump out in the roof line was added to accommodate the large windows.

The space under the stairs is an integral part of the new downstairs bathroom. Cutouts along the stair line house towels and baskets. The tile shower with seat is built under and into the angle of the stairs. A glass block inset provides needed light.

The patio is reached through french doors from the den and is the stepping stone to a large native plant garden that includes paths and a pond. All types of blooming plants provide color and texture. The garden was formed on land reclaimed when the railroad abandoned the railbed. This railbed is now the V&E Greenline, a Tennessee designated historic greenway maintained by volunteers from the Vollintine-Evergreen neighborhood.

A landscape architect, Margaret designed the addition and drew the plans herself. Doing it herself is the norm for Margaret who laid the patio when she was eight months pregnant, with bricks that Bob found in the backyard by digging out old grass covered paths. At the back of the garden is a playhouse she copied from a ruin and built with the help of their two children.

1906 Jackson Avenue
Renovation challenges, large and small, abounded in the unusual 1922 English Tudor home of Vince Fayette and...
Perry Uffelman. It is difficult to imagine this elegant home with termite damage, gouges and stains in the plaster walls, and exposed bathroom plumbing. The home's previous owner completed much of the major structural work. The changes start with the front porch. A small concrete stoop was replaced with a bathroom plumbing. The home's previous owner completed much of the major structural and stains in the plaster walls, and exposed Mary Perry Uffelman.

The large kitchen with melon walls and white cabinets was once three small rooms. Cabinets, counters and flooring are all new. The kitchen leads into the breakfast room, which is all original. One of the interesting features of the renovation is how it fits into the existing space. Taupe walls and white trim tie the entire house together.

Upstairs, two of the bedrooms and a bath have been turned into a bedroom/sitting room. Doors opened from each of the two bedrooms into the bathroom. One door was closed, leaving access from the sitting room only. The wall between the two bedrooms was removed and an arch added to connect the two rooms.

Details provide the finishing touch to the renovations and make the house special. The owners added flat decorative molding to the tile and wood fireplace surround. Molding and finials were added to the staircase. Original details include a tiled niche for the radiator in the bathroom and the original wooden medicine cabinet and bathroom cabinets.

1900 Jackson Avenue

Renovations should be undertaken for function but done with style. That is certainly the case in the 1928 Tudor cottage home of Chuck Dille and Randall Paxton. Chuck, an architect, believes almost all floor plans can be improved and the renovation should be seamless, virtually undetectable from the original home. The core of the house — living room, dining room, library and sunroom — now flows together, rather than being four separate rooms. Doors that opened into the core and took space were removed, further enhancing the flow and open character of the core. The wall between the living room and dining room was removed completely and the wall into the library was turned into a large open arch, echoing the one leading from the foyer to the living room.

The melding of form and function can be seen dramatically in the changes to the hall. A long straight hall originally led from the living room to the back bedroom. The lowering of the hall ceiling to accommodate the heating system ductwork was the impetus for the hall's transformation into an art gallery. The hall now leads from the library instead of the living room and takes a turn, allowing the viewer to experience each piece of art separately without competition from multiple pieces. For symmetry and ease in entertaining, a doorway into the core was changed to a cased entrance with the door removed and a paired cased entrance also open to the core was added. The last five feet of the hall, with a cedar closet, became the vestibule of the back bedroom, further changing the hall's original proportions.

The kitchen and bathrooms are further examples of enhancing rather than re-doing. In the kitchen, new flooring and counters complement the original metal cabinets that were painted a deep green and updated with new hardware. In the bathrooms, the original tile and fixtures remain, preserving the original character of the house.

The blending of lovely form and useful function is evident everywhere in the home, not just in the major renovations. In the kitchen entryway, a breaker box becomes a shelf for glasses. Shelves nestle above doorways, providing storage and decoration. In the basement broom closet/laundry room/studio, molded blocks and 2x4s have been fashioned into sleek and sturdy work spaces that will make you forget all those college apartment bookshelves and send you home to start measuring your own work space.

862 Kensington Place

Steve Gadbois faced three of the most common renovating tasks in his 1927 Tudor cottage: kitchen, attic and second bathroom. The old kitchen (which he describes as "the worst in midtown") had two windows and five doors, all in the wrong places. There was so little counter space that a microwave took up half. The new kitchen has three doors and two big bay windows as well as a regular window. Quarry tile replaced the old linoleum floor, and the shelves in the bay windows are tiled to match. The door from the dining room has been moved so that there is no sight line from the living room straight through the dining room into the kitchen. In the back yard, steps and a small concrete porch, now a setting for plants, mark where the back door was. A focal point of the kitchen is a Hoosier cabinet, which, formerly covered with green paint and in pieces, was a "present" from a departing neighbor.

Some of the tongue and groove pine paneling of the attic had to be removed to add insulation. Then dormered skylights were added to give needed light; matching stained glass panels hang in front of them. Instead of a separate cooling system, a second thermostat and an auxiliary blower in the ductwork bring up cooler air from the downstairs when the attic temperature rises.

The upstairs bathroom is definitely not your usual Midtown bathroom. Tucked under the eaves, its angles are accented with wood and a peaked, custom-built window. A redwood surround encloses the jacuzzi tub. There's also a shower, a weight bench and an aquarium with stool (a favorite vantage point for the cats).

Much of Steve's renovation has definitely been hands-on. Except for the rough plumbing and sprayed ceiling, Steve did all the work on the upstairs bathroom. He also built the long bookcases that line the short wall under the eaves. In building his desk, which leads off the newly-placed backdoor, Steve built the frame free-standing (so it could more easily be squared and leveled), moved it into position, dug the postholes, and dropped it into place.

899 Idlewild Street

If you have ever wanted to see a renovation from the ground up, this is your chance. This Tudor cottage is currently owned by the Vollintine-Evergreen Community Development Corporation. The interior, completely destroyed by a fire, is being renovated to look and feel like the original 1929 house but with all the newest amenities. Floors and walls are being installed, and visitors can look below and behind beams, joists, and walls to see structural renovation details. Discover some of the challenges of renovating to recapture the historic look and feel of this historic home.
FREE HOUSEHOLD HAZARDOUS WASTE COLLECTION

Dispose properly of dangerous and toxic materials on Saturday, May 8, from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., next to the Children's Museum at Hollywood and Central. Acceptable materials include paints, paint thinners, oil, car batteries, pesticides, herbicides, wood preservatives, and household cleaners. Up to 100 pounds of household waste per household is allowed. There is no cost, and the benefits to our environment are real! If you have questions, call the Shelby County Environmental Improvement Commission at 387-5707.

CALLING ALL SENIORS

Do you remember the days when neighbors would sit on their front porches and look out for one another? Do you miss baking goods for neighbors who feel under the weather? If so, VECA needs your help in initiating a program for seniors. We're looking for a few good ideas for starting a senior outreach program in the Vollintine-Evergreen neighborhood. If you're interested in planning, volunteering, or participating in a senior outreach program, please call Beulah Green or Kristen Fitzpatrick at the VECA office at 276-1782.

CYPRESS CREEK WALK-THROUGH

by Emily Passini

On Tuesday February 16, 1999, members of the Cypress Creek Beautification Committee hosted a public walk-through with city and state representatives from Public Works, the Parks Commission, the City Beautiful Commission, the Memphis and Shelby County Health Department, and the Tennessee Department of Environment and Conservation. The purpose of the walk-through was to inform the officials of the chronic problem of dumping along the creek and floodplain area. Following a short introduction to the Cypress Creek project from intern Emily Passini at the VECA office, officials drove to the floodplain entrance at Evergreen and Merchant Streets. Rhodes College Urban Studies student and former VECA intern Trent Pingenot discussed routine maintenance problems at the Cypress Creek bike path as well as the main safety concerns, worn fences and overgrown bushes and weeds. Stonewall resident and Cypress Creek Committee member Scott Banbury discussed issues relevant to the floodplain maintenance and future recreation possibilities.

The walk-through was a great success, and it seems to have forged new relationships between public officials and the community. Anyone interested in participating with the Cypress Creek Beautification Committee should call the VECA office or attend our meetings the third Tuesday of each month.

MEMPHIS GOODWILL INDUSTRIES: “NOT A CHARITY BUT A CHANCE”

Isn’t Goodwill known for its thrift stores and donated goods programs? Yes, but those programs exist to fund their bigger responsibility — helping disabled and disadvantaged people find jobs and providing them job skills training. The ultimate goal of Memphis Goodwill Industries is to see disabled individuals begin proud, new lives of independence and help them maximize their individual potential. From its start with Boston pastor Edgar J. Helms, Goodwill has grown into a global network that served more than 130,655 people in 1997.

Of the several donation centers and store locations in the Memphis area, the closest to Vollintine-Evergreen are at 2605 Chelsea, 574 South Highland (at Walker), and 792 North White Station (at Summer and I-240).

As the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, staff, and volunteers take pride in serving women who strive to make a difference in their lives, they now extend their services to another neighborhood by opening the DeNeuville Extension at Holy Names Church at 697 Keel Avenue. Child care and transportation to and from the Center can be arranged.
