The Evergreen News
A Neighborhood Newspaper Working With Vollintine- Evergreen Community Association

FUTURE OF NEWSPAPER DEPENDS ON YOU
By Kathie Jarmon Kerr

The Evergreen News is still searching for volunteers to fill some key staff positions. We have announced the openings in previous issues of the paper, asked local churches to make note of them in their newsletters, put up signs and made appeals at recent VECA meetings. Still, no one has stepped forward.

It brings us to ask a painful and soul-searching question: Has The Evergreen News outlived its purpose? For 13 years now the newspaper has spread the good news about the quality of life in the Vollintine-Evergreen community, only occasionally breaking its monthly publication cycle. Produced and distributed by volunteers, it has informed and entertained us; made us laugh and made us angry, angry enough to make us initiate change within our community.

Do we no longer need The Evergreen News as an instigator? Before answering, let’s look at the issues which face the community now. An abandoned railroad track has the potential of becoming a neighborhood dumping ground and a zoning battleground between developers and residents. The controversy over what to do with the former I-40 corridor land along Overton Park still exists. Crime in our neighborhood hasn’t disappeared.

The Evergreen News was originally started by the founders of the Vollintine-Evergreen community in their efforts to stop white flight and improve race relations through a common communication tool. Yet few blacks have ever volunteered to be on the paper staff. Why? Have we reached the point where race relations are so good we no longer need The Evergreen News? An honest evaluation of the black and white ratio in our local public schools and even our neighborhood churches tells us different.

All these questions could just as well be asked of the Vollintine-Evergreen Community Association. Membership numbers more than ever, yet VECA’s meetings are poorly attended. And the VECA executive committee, the body which initiates actions and decisions for the group as a whole, has seen few new faces over the years.

But a community association, unlike a community newspaper, can survive periods of apathy, because the association is always there when you need it should a crisis occur. It takes nothing more than calling a meeting. A newspaper, once it folds, takes a miracle to start up again. Advertisers must be recontacted, a new staff must be formed, distributors solicited, printing contracts must be renegotiated. It takes more work than several volunteers can muster.

It’s ironic that the newspaper is facing its demise after what is probably its most successful year of publication. Advertisers increased to the point where three special six-page editions were produced, the paper held its first photography contest and readership is high.

The Vollintine-Evergreen community and VECA can survive without The Evergreen News. Whether they want to or not can only be answered by people responding to this plea for volunteers. The editor or any member of the staff can give you more information about the positions which are described here. (Please see staff box for phone numbers.)

In order for The Evergreen News to continue in its present format, these positions must be filled by the newspaper’s January 5 meeting. That meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at Lindsay Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Advertising Manager(s): Responsible for maintaining advertising revenue to pay for publishing expenses of The Evergreen News. Lately, we’ve had advertisers on a waiting list and it has been a matter of first come, first served. However, some solicitations for ads might be required in the future. The low cost of our ads, $10 for a small ad and $20 for a large ad, makes marketing rather easy. The ad manager(s) stays in touch monthly with advertisers on running their ads again or making revisions. This is great experience in sales and marketing or for those who want to keep active in this field. But volunteers considering the job should be aware that it might require 10 hours per month and some travel expenses if they need to visit a neighborhood business. The ads manager(s) would also be responsible for coordinating the efforts of accounts managers.

Assistant Advertising Manager: In order to lessen the work load of the advertising manager this year, the position of assistant advertising manager was formed. That person is responsible for designing ads. Designing ads, deciding what art work goes where and what size to make the type can be challenging and fun. Again, valuable experience can

THANK YOU, CARRIERS

About 150 pictures are missing from this issue. You would recognize them immediately if you saw them. They’re pictures of your neighbors who volunteer to deliver The Evergreen News each month. Through the cold of winter and the heat of summer, they’re dedicated to getting the “E” News to your door. Some have been delivering The Evergreen News since the paper was founded 13 years ago. And they do it for no reason other than their community’s best interest. Some of the carriers, when they’re not feeling quite up to par or the weather is too difficult, will even pay a neighbor’s teenage son or daughter to deliver the newspapers for them.

The editorial staff of The Evergreen News thanks the carriers and district managers heartily for allowing your work to be seen by more than 5,500 families each month. Next time you see your The Evergreen News carriers, tell them how much you appreciate it, too.

What follows is a list of names of The Evergreen News carriers. If you’re a carrier and your name has been left out, please forgive us for the error and call so we may insert it in the next issue.

John Burhwiler

EDITOR RECALLS FIRST "E" NEWS
by Kini Kedigh

Giving birth means nine months of preparation followed by hours of labor. For John Burhwiler, "Father of The Evergreen News," the labor came first and continued for the next two years.

Burhwiler, a professor of German at Southwestern, conceived the city's longest published community newspaper in 1970 after volunteering to help at a meeting of the Vollintine-Evergreen Community Action Association. To assist him in publishing a neighborhood newspaper, other volunteers stepped forward: George Bradfute, Rick Thomas, Warren Lowry, Golden Shumaker, Lawrence Anthony, Emma Palmer and Martha Edwards. This team wrote, typed, illustrated, designed and hand delivered door-to-door the first issue of the Evergreen News on January 25, 1971.

The first issue featured an editorial introducing the newspaper to the neighborhood; a map of the community noting the churches, schools, parks and shopping areas; neighborhood meeting announcements; and a "Meet the Neighbors" column which focused on Dr. and Mrs. H.C. Maxey, residents of Stonewall for 41 years.

With following issues, Burhwiler realized the paper needed support if it was to survive, so advertising was solicited. In the beginning, businesses were reluctant to support the newspaper, however, Burhwiler was successful in convincing Carl's Bakery, Borg Pharmacy, Bill & Jim's Gulf Service Station, and Firestone to give it a try. "They were all smart businessmen," Burhwiler says, and once the newspaper was established, advertising increased with many of the original advertisers still supportive of the newspaper today.

Although he is not surprised his "child" has reached adolescence, Burhwiler says publication was "touch and go" for awhile. He is glad the community still has a voice and is proud of the part he played in bringing that voice to fruition.

"The Evergreen News gave then and continues to give to the community today a sense of neighborhood," Burhwiler said. "The purpose of the newspaper was to let the people of the community know that our neighborhood was a good place to live. I think we did that."
(Editor's Note: The most common phrases we hear from people who are asked to volunteer for this position which Susan Fagan is leaving are, "I'm not qualified," or "I don't have the time." Yet Susan, with no advertising experience, and with three children, and recently, a part-time job, has managed successfully these past five years. She welcomes inquiries about the position.)

For the past five years a familiar sight to neighborhood advertisers has been Susan Fagan with her growing family. This issue marks the end of half a decade of hard work as advertising manager for Susan on The Evergreen News.

In October, 1978, Karen Tynes, then editor of the Evergreen News, asked Susan if she would be interested in being advertising business manager. Being somewhat confined at home with her first baby, Susan agreed thinking it would be a good opportunity to work with people and get to know her neighborhood.

In the course of five years, Susan has made many friends. She speaks fondly of Mr. Porter at the Gulf Station and Mr. Langston at Firestone, both on Jackson. She recalls Tina Dowling at Southwestern Hair Care who offers goodie to her clientele and wears costumes at Halloween.

During those years, Susan has been the most surprised at those advertisers who didn't pay. "You can't judge a book by the cover," she said, adding, "I got where I could pretty much tell who would and wouldn't pay for their advertising."

Her most bizarre experience happened one day when she was out collecting bills. She was told to go to an advertiser's home to get her money. When Susan and her children arrived, the house had broken windows, and the owner yelled from behind a closed door. After telling her children to run should she give the high sign, Susan did manage to collect $20 out of $30 owed. The ad manager now is no longer responsible for collecting and billing. Bills are either mailed or money is collected on the front-end.

Susan grew up in Pittsburg and met her husband Tom while studying social work at Kent State in Ohio. Tom is the director of school psychology in the psychology department at Memphis State. Her three junior helpers are Shannon, 7, Lance, 5, and Collen, 3.

Susan is now going to take stock of her life and move on to other volunteer work. She reflects, "Leaving the Evergreen News creates a void. There's a spirit that develops in keeping up morale."

And The Evergreen News will miss Susan. Who else would call an advertiser from her hospital bed hours before the birth of her third child just because she promised she would?
EDITOR COORDINATES STAFF

As editor of The Evergreen News, Kathie Jarmon Kerr coordinates the efforts of several staff writers. Those writers include: Susan Helms, a nurse and mother of two sons; Sue Strong, a dental hygienist and mother of one son and Kini Kedigh, a public relations writer at St. Jude's. Kathie has worked on two daily newspapers in Mississippi and is currently a free-lance writer with Mid-South Business Newspaper. She is also employed part-time at Ward Archer & Associates, a public relations and advertising firm.

Susan Fagan (L) and Dorinda Smith have made an excellent advertising team, as evident from the ads in each issue of The Evergreen News. Susan solicits the ads and Dorinda designs each one. Both, however, will be retiring from active staff positions this year. Susan, mother of three children and a former social worker by career, has been ad manager for five years. Dorinda, an editor of The Evergreen News for two years, will be moving from our neighborhood soon. Dorinda works at Pappagallo and is expecting her second child in May. The third member of our business team, business manager Jenny Raber Land, is not pictured. Even though Jenny has moved from our neighborhood, she is generously continuing her duties as business manager until a replacement can be found. Jenny’s background is in counseling and business. She is expecting her second child in May.

With an assortment of typed-set stories, scissors and rubber cement, Grace Wallace (L) and Beverly Berry create each new issue of The Evergreen News from a dining room table. They lay-out the paper and decide where to put articles and pictures. Other than being very good at jigsaw puzzles, neither Grace nor Beverly have had professional training in lay-out and design. Grace is a retired nursing administrator who is active in a variety of volunteer work and Beverly is a teacher at Evergreen Presbyterian Church’s Mother’s Day Out program. Beverly is married with two children.

The last Saturday morning in each month finds distribution manager Fran Griffith (R) counting out thousands of newspapers which will be taken to about a dozen district managers. They, in turn, will give them to more than 150 carriers to deliver. Keeping up with a circulation force that large is a difficult job, but one Fran handles well. Helping her out is assistant distribution manager Harriet Smith. Fran, who is expecting her third child in May, is a bookkeeper for Pappagallo. Harriet is a homemaker and mother of two.
be gained in the area of printing and design. How much time it takes depends on a number of factors: how many new ads are inserted each month and the experience of the assistant advertising manager.

Account Manager(s): Responsible for helping the advertising manager handle or solicit advertisers. If several account managers are responsible for handling a few advertisers each, it will greatly lighten the job of advertising manager. Account managers would work closely with the advertising manager so accounts aren’t duplicated.

Business Manager: Essentially, the business manager is responsible for all bookkeeping activities. That includes mailing advertisers’ bills on a quarterly basis and paying The Evergreen News’ bills on a monthly basis. Business managers are encouraged to be able to provide financial statements at each monthly meeting, at least to the point of telling us if we’re in the red or black. The business manager may also find himself or herself in the position of calling advertisers and nicely, but firmly, reminding them of outstanding bills. The business manager is the only one who can make withdrawals and deposits in The Evergreen News bank account.

“E” NEWS BIRTHDAY PARTY

The Evergreen News becomes a teenager this January, having been published for 13 years. To celebrate, a birthday party was held at Dino’s Southwestern Grill. Proprietors of Dino’s, Dino Grisanti and son Rudy, generously offered their restaurant after hours and provided us with delicious ravioli and spaghetti dinners, at less than half the usual price. Rudy’s sister-in-law, Carroll Pellegra, also helped. No birthday party would be complete without a cake and Carl’s Bakery came through again with its baking magic. About 30 people attended the party and witnessed the kick off of a volunteer campaign to fill vacant staff positions. Everyone’s wish as they blew out the candles on the cake that night was for another decade for The Evergreen News.
